KQED's New Member Information Policy
KQED has updated its membership list policy, which outlines the use of our list while ensuring our active control in safeguarding against unauthorized use. While the policy hasn’t changed our practice of exchanging your name with other nonprofits, KQED’s participation in cooperative databases to identify best prospects for new members as well as reactivation of former members is new. By participating, you may receive fewer solicitations without jeopardizing critical revenue support for KQED programming. As always, we value your contribution and understand if you don’t want to participate in either of these programs. If you’d like to opt out of list exchange or cooperative database activity, please contact Member Services at 415-553-2150 or email member@kqed.org and we’ll update your account information to reflect your preferences. You can find the new policy online at kqed.org/information-policy.
